

Employment Law: Employee Concentration

Abrahamson Vorachek & Rdzanek

The law firm of Abrahamson Vorachek & Rdzanek concentrates in the practice of employment law. The firm includes five attorneys who handle, among other matters, claims for sex, age, race, and disability discrimination, ERISA claims, wage and hour matters, suits for commissions, claims for money due under employment agreements, Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), and whistleblower claims. The firm also carries out workplace investigations and reviews employment/severance agreements for individuals, as well as non-compete agreements, non-solicitation agreements, and other restrictive covenants for individuals.

Our two Emerging Lawyers exemplify the strong work ethic of our firm.

As a partner, Terrill A. Wilkins counsels employees in a variety of private-sector matters, including employment disputes involving workplace discrimination and harassment, FMLA, disability accommodations, retaliatory discharge, contract disputes, and employee benefits and executive compensation. Mr. Wilkins represents employees before the federal, state, and local employment law enforcement agencies (EEOC, IDHR, CCCHR, and CCHR), as well as in federal court litigation. He has also represented numerous employees in both private and court or agency-led mediations.

Mr. Wilkins has conducted sexual harassment training and provided counsel on employee handbooks and policies at the request of employers.

Courtney B. Sundstrom also counsels private sector employees in a variety of matters, including employment situations involving discrimination and harassment, accommodations for disabilities, FMLA, retaliation, contract disputes and negotiations of restrictive covenants such as non-compete and non-solicitation agreements. Ms. Sundstrom represents employees before employment law enforcement agencies at the federal, state, and local levels (EEOC, IDHR, CCCHR, and CCHR). Ms. Sundstrom has also represented employees in mediation, including private mediation as well as EEOC and IDHR mediations.

In addition to her work with employees, Ms. Sundstrom has assisted in preparing sexual harassment training materials and employee handbooks; she also has experience conducting workplace investigations at the request of employers.

We are honored to have these two exemplary attorneys at our firm.
